Social-media has proved to be a breeding ground for breaches of confidentiality and other ethical missteps. But can these ethical issues be avoided by avoiding social media? Likely not. Lawyers may have an ethical duty to understand at least the basics of social media. This session is designed to make attorneys aware of the potential landmines involved in the use and avoidance of social-media tools-some seeming obvious and some less obvious. This is an hour that is appropriate for the Facebook novice and for the seasoned social-networker.

The Rules of Professional Conduct set forth the responsibilities of law firm partners, managers and supervisors for subordinate lawyers. Appropriate policies and procedures coupled with proper supervision can catch problems early before they lead to disciplinary complaints or malpractice actions. They can also identify the warning signs of professional impairment arising out of substance abuse, addiction, anxiety, depression and other similar illnesses. Join LCL in a discussion of how to comply with the Rules and possibly help a colleague in distress.
